What they are

A response paper is a short piece of thinking, not summary: take the week's required readings and do something with them — challenge an argument, apply it to a case the author didn't use, put two readings into conflict, or connect the reading to something happening now.

The test: could someone who has done the reading learn something from your response? Restating the argument fails that test; arguing with it passes.

What a good one probably looks like

- Leads with your claim, not the author's.
- Uses the reading precisely — one concept or finding, named.
- Brings a case or comparison the reading didn't use.
- Ends with a genuine question for the room.

You do not need sources beyond the week's readings, and there is no bibliography. Cite by author and page where you are using something specific.

Generative AI

Permissions for this assessment, in the vocabulary of the School of Social Sciences and Philosophy Assignment Submission Form:

Submission-form category	This assessment
No GenAI used	This is the expected answer.
Brainstorming	Not permitted. The point of the exercise is that you had a reaction to the reading.
Research/learning assistance	Permitted for one thing only: clarifying a term or passage you could not follow after genuinely trying. Not for summarising the reading — asking a model what an article says instead of reading it defeats the whole component.
Writing assistance	Not permitted. These are short, and they exist to show you did the reading and thought about it. Spellcheck is fine.
Direct AI content inclusion	Not permitted.
Other use	Describe it on the form. If in doubt, ask me before the deadline; asking is never held against you.

The Assignment Submission Form must be page 1 of each response paper, as for all written work.

Word limits, late work and extensions
